Biographical Note

---

Rev. David Avery (1746-1817) was born in Franklin, Connecticut. He graduated from Yale in 1769, studied theology at Dartmouth College, and was ordained as a missionary to the Native Americans in 1771. After serving as an army chaplain during the Revolutionary War, he was installed as the pastor in Bennington, Vermont in 1780. He moved to Wrentham, Massachusetts in 1783 to replace the minister of the First Church in Wrentham, who had died in office. While at Wrentham, Rev. Avery had an increasing number of difficulties with his parishioners, largely over his strict adherence to disciplinary rules, and he was eventually dismissed from his service in Wrentham in 1794. From there he moved back to Connecticut and served the church in Union for a few years before resuming his missionary work. He died of typhus fever at age 71.

Scope and Contents

This collection contains a manuscript volume prepared by Rev. David Avery, and sent to David Howell, Esq. "for his judgment & advice," about the strife that had grown between Avery and his congregation. The base of the disagreement was how matters of church discipline should be addressed; While Avery adhered strictly to the procedure set out in the book of Matthew, a group of members wanted a more flexible system. In this manuscript, Avery details a series of conversations and interventions that led to his eventual break with the church.
