Historical Note

The early history of Brookfield, and the congregational church within, is difficult to discern, with most of the earliest town records having been lost to fire and the earliest church records too being lost to time. The town of Brookfield was first settled during the 1660s. The first meeting house in Brookfield was built atop Foster's Hill in Brookfield, though there were likely long periods where worship at that location was impossible due to ongoing conflicts with Native Americans. In 1715, construction began on the second meeting house and in 1717 the First Church was officially gathered. The third meeting house was constructed in 1755 about a half mile northwest of Foster Hill and in 1794 the fourth meeting house was constructed on the same spot as the third.

West Brookfield split from Brookfield in 1848. At that time the First Church changed its name to Congregational Church. The church joined the United Church of Christ in 1964 and likely around that time changed its name again to First Congregational Church. The church continues to serve its community today.
