Description

Historical Note¹: The Boston Society for the Moral and Religious Instruction for the Poor was organized October 9, 1816 in Boston, although it was not officially incorporated until February 21, 1820. The founding officers were a mixture of clergymen, active church members and business men and included: Rev. Joshua Huntington, president; William Thurston, vice president; Josiah Salisbury, treasurer; and Thomas Vose, secretary. The original Board of Directors were Samuel Armstrong, Charles Cleveland, Pliny Cutler, Henry Homes, John Hopkins, John Proctor, Samuel Train and Josiah Vinton, Jr. Please note that many of the wives and relatives of these men were active and founding members of the Corban Society (Massachusetts) and Graham Society (Massachusetts); some of the men occasionally served as auditors for these societies.

The group was funded through life subscribers, who contributed $20, and annual subscribers, who contributed smaller amounts annually; individuals and churches also contributed funds. Some of the members were both life members and annual subscribers, i.e., Thomas Vose and Samuel Armstrong.² The organization was concerned with the basic right of children to have an education; individuals who could not afford to attend church services and the relationship of illiteracy to this matter; and the spiritual leadership of seaman.³ The Society was in part a response to the problems of the increased urbanization of Boston. There was an increase in immigration, as laborers were recruited for building railroads and as mill laborers.⁴ Other issues for the poor of Boston were the Civil War, which contributed to the loss of family income earners and the Great Boston fire of November of 1872.⁵ Public institutions were not able to deal with the employment needs, illness, and housing needs of the new residents, nor the change in the city's homogeneity. In this context, the City Missionary Society (renamed May 3, 1841) attempted to deal with the physical and spiritual needs of the poor through home visitation by paid missionaries, tract distributors, Sabbath Schools and summer programs for youth.

The City Missionary Society (CMS) has had seven different locations, with the majority of the history in Congregational House, 14 Beacon Street. CMS was located in the original Congregational House at 7A Beacon Street (1872-1899), as well as the current location (from 1899 to the present),⁶ where CMS continues the work it started in 1816.

Scope of Collection:

Collection includes annual reports, minutes of meetings from board of directors and committees; financial records; programs run by the Society; photographs and lantern slides. The Congregational Library & Archives does not hold a complete record of materials, as the organization is still active and retains many of its own records.

Series IV: Programs

Date: 1920-2006

Extent: 5 boxes

Scope of Series: CMS has had many programs over the years. The majority of the material from this series is photographs. The bulk of the printed photographs are from Camps Andover and Waldron, which were camps for children 8-15, primarily from lower-income families. Other topics include youth programs, volunteerism, and Rosemary Cottage in Maine.

Arrangement: The photographs are stored in envelopes by approximate size and arranged by topic and within each topic, loosely in chronological order.

Series VI: Lantern Slides and Photographs

Date: undated

Extent: 81 lantern slides, 1 box

Scope of Series: Lantern slides contain eighty-one items circa 1890-1905. Images include churches and/or congregations in Dorchester, Roxbury, East Boston, Franklin Park, Brighton, Hyde Park, Everett, Charleston, Belmont, Saugus and Boston, Massachusetts, as well as Cleveland, Ohio. A number of these slides also show the neighborhoods around the churches and/or recreational images, such as picnics. The images also include the Boston Seaman's Friend Society (including an image of the Bethel boat, the "Seaman's Friend") and City Missionary Society's Rosemary Cottage in Elliot, Maine.

Images were identified using the title of the slide and/or information in the slide, along with Richard Taylor's Churches of Christ of the Congregational Way in New England (Benton Harbor, Michigan: self-published, 1989). If there was any question about the location, a note was added. A small portion of the slides did not have any title whatsoever and are currently not identified.

Arrangement: The lantern slides are in one grouping.
