Historical Note

The Fourth Congregational Church of Chicago traces its origins back to a Congregational Sunday school which started in 1867 and met in a blacksmith shop. From this Sunday school sprang three churches (Grace Church [1867], Cortland Street Church [1888], and Maplewood Church [1892]). These three churches merged in 1916 and took the name Fourth Church. Their building was destroyed by fire on January 27, 1925. A new building was proposed and building began in November of 1925 on Talman Avenue, the site of the old Maplewood church. The church joined the National Association of Congregational Christian Churches in 1962. In 1992, on the occasion of the 125th anniversary of the founding of the Sunday school which started it all, the Fourth Congregational Church was thriving, with a well-attended Sunday school, and a music program. The church was active in the Midwest Association of Congregational Christian Churches and the National Association Pilgrim Fellowship.
